

Once upon a time there was an Emperor who absolutely loved clothes.

Two naughty tailors heard about the Emperor's love of clothes and decided to fool the Emperor and make some money at the same time.

They told him that they were tailors who would make him the finest clothes in the world, using the finest cloth, and anyone who was a fool wouldn't be able to see the cloth because it was so fine and delicate.

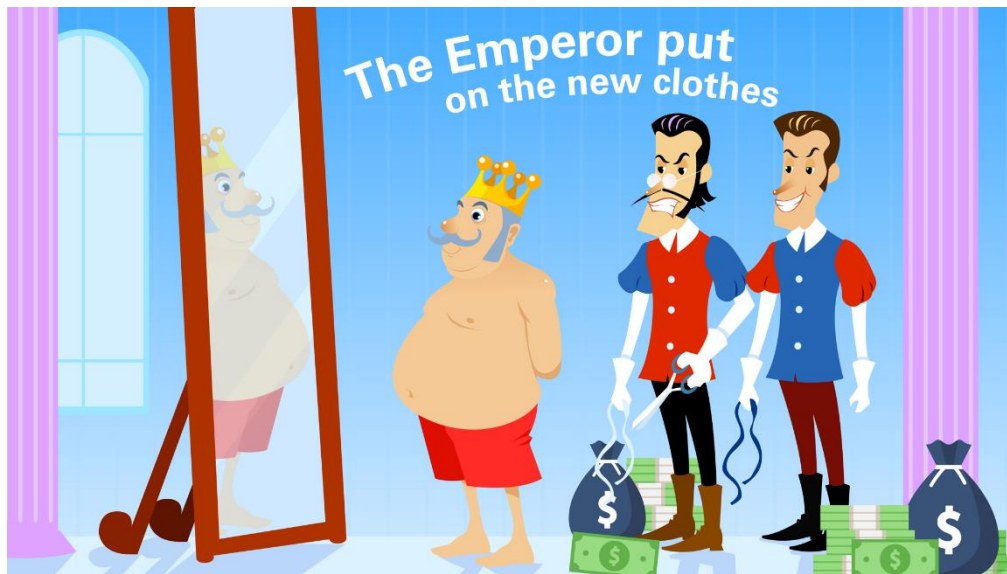

The Emperor was thrilled and paid the naughty tailors a huge sum of money to make him a new outfit.

The tailors got to work and pretended to make the fine cloth for the Emperor's new outfit.

After a few days, the Emperor sent his Minister to check how things were going. The Minister couldn't see a single thread.

But the Minister didn't want the Emperor to think he was stupid, so he told the Emperor that the cloth was the finest and most beautiful he had ever seen.

Before long, the tailors were finished and they dressed the Emperor in the new clothes.

Just like the Minister, the Emperor couldn't see the clothes, but he didn't want to appear silly. He told the tailors that the clothes were the most beautiful he had ever seen. He thanked them for their work and paid them well.

Later that day the Emperor paraded through the streets of the town.

Everyone knew that anyone who was a fool wouldn't be able to see the cloth, so to begin with, they all pretended to see it and cheered as the Emperor went by.

But one little girl suddenly shouted out 'Why isn't the Emperor wearing any clothes?' Suddenly all of the people realised they'd been fooled and began to laugh at the Emperor.

The Emperor was embarrassed and ashamed. He sent his guards to find the naughty tailors but they had vanished and were never seen again.
